

ROPE RADAR

ABOUT THE ROPE RADAR

The Rope Radar is a tool to help with the negotiation of shibari sessions and learning more about the experience you're looking for in rope. Instead of focussing on certain practices or pattern, it encourages both rope bottom and rope top to discover the emotions, experiences and desires they want to dive into during their session.

USING THE RADAR

You can look at the radar together and use it as inspiration when you don't know what you are looking for or want think about new aspects of rope to explore. You can go through its elements together and talk about what things you like or dislike and what they mean to you. You can playfully draw in individually how much the elements resonate with you on the scales, compare the results, and discuss similarities and discrepancies. The possibilities are many. Use your imagination and use it in any way that suits you and your partner best.

LIMITATIONS

The Rope Radar does not replace other components of proper negotiation, such as vetting your partner before aiming for a session, checking if the both of you vibe, picking up on the partner's mood and state of mind or discussing other important topics like physical and mental limitations, safety aspects, general boundaries or aftercare. It really focusses on opening up a space to discuss what connecting through rope can and should provide or not, in order to also give opportunities to discuss how these things can and should be provided or avoided.
